Scooter Braun Invests in European Cannabis as Region Opens Up

By Kristine Owram and Ruben Munsterman

A German company has secured the largest financing round to date in Europe's growing medical cannabis sector from a group of investors including the entertainment mogul behind names like Justin Bieber and Usher.

Berlin-based Sanity Group raised $22 million in equity from Scooter Braun's investment fund TQ Ventures and German firm Cherry Ventures. Karan Wadhera, a managing partner at Snoop Dogg's Casa Verde Capital, also invested personal money in the round.

Currently, Sanity Group is active in Germany with medical cannabis company Sanatio Pharma and wellness brand VAAY. "Our aim is to become number one in Europe, a market that some believe could surpass North America in size and volume, depending on the progress of legalization across the European continent," said Finn Hansel, managing director at Sanity.
