On-Demand Laundry

The Vision

Time is a commodity these days and it's becoming even more scarce.

As such, there is a rise on outsourcing household chores.

*According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics

The Data

People are willing to spend money to gain time

They are willing to spend

$50 a week

To eliminate an hour of work

That's about 3 hampr per week

85% of survey respondents said they would be willing to spend $ each week to save time on these tasks

= wide adoption

Why hasn't this worked in the past?

Because on-demand laundry has a tricky past with thin margins and poor customer experience.

The Problem

Asset Heavy

The initial cost of building and maintaining a facility is prohibitive and requires a steady workforce to operate.

No Customization

In existing models, laundry is tagged and washed with other people's laundry with no ability to customize the wash or dry settings.

Expensive Pricing

Pricing is not transparent - many are based on per pound pricing which is confusing and can be cost-prohibitive.

The Solution

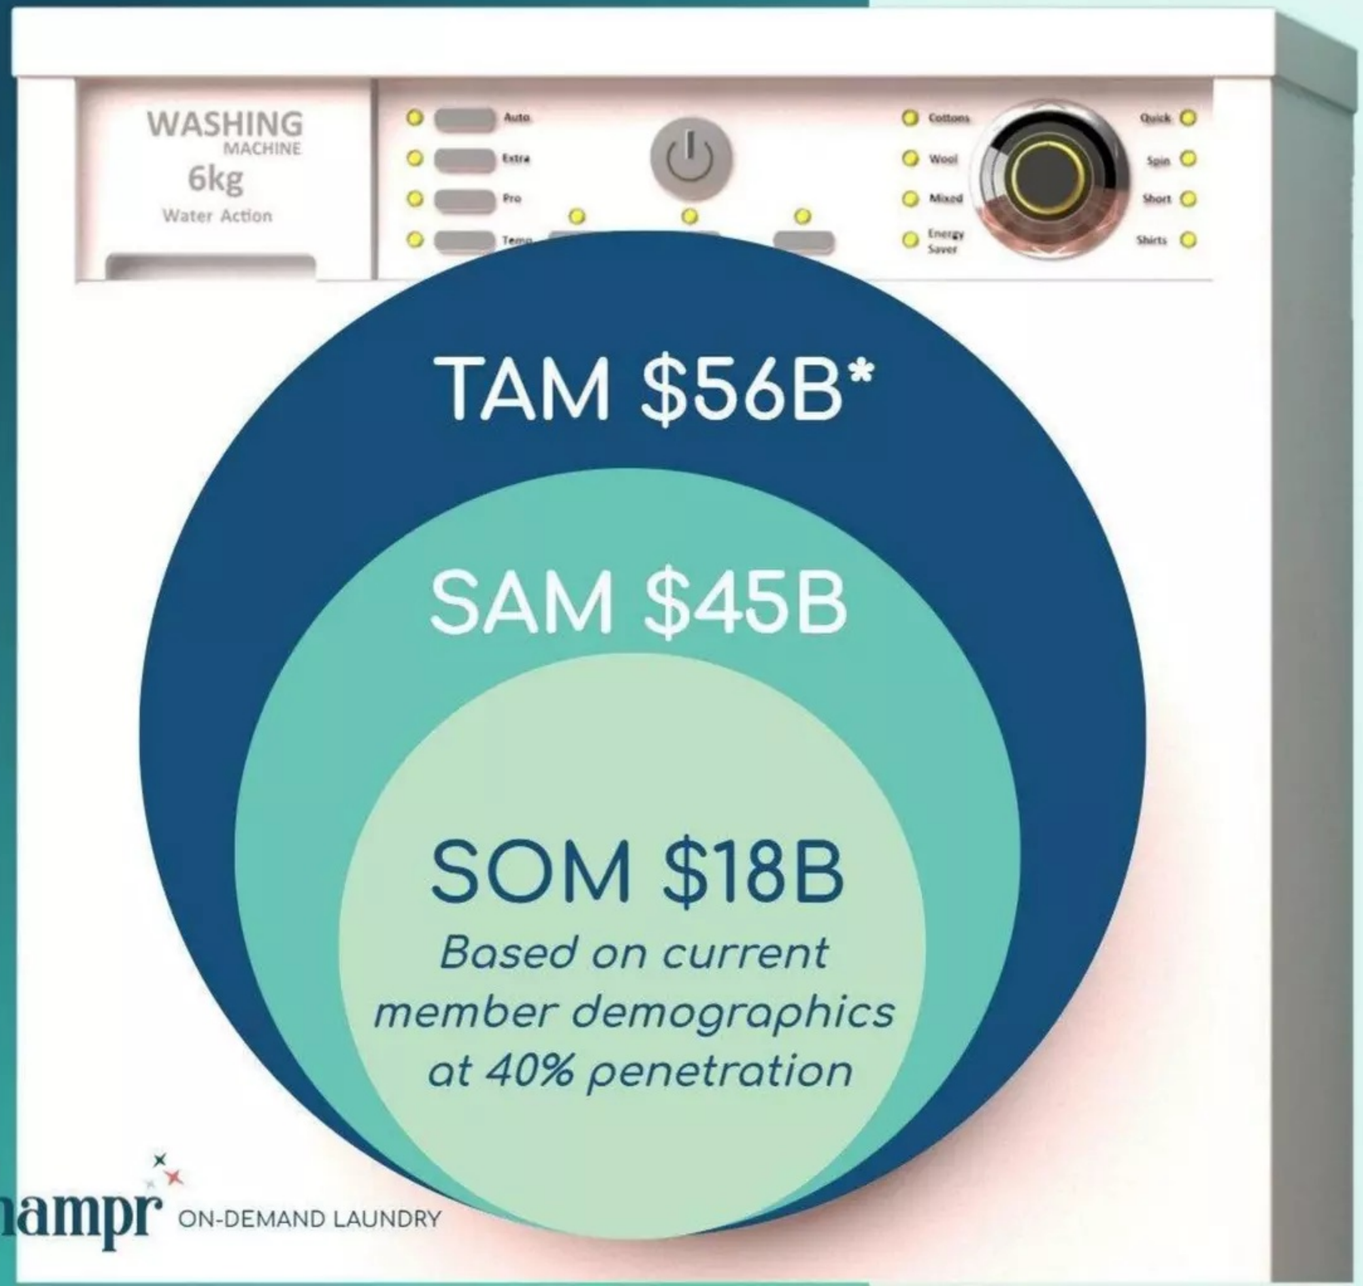

hampr

A peer to peer on-demand laundry solution.

With the rise in the gig economy, people are comfortable with peers performing personal services like shopping, pet sitting, transportation, etc.

And we can scale literally anywhere that has demand.

Market Size

By 2025, the household management industry will nearly triple from

$122B > $339B

Laundry is the fastest growing sub-market within household management

According to care economy research by Springbank Collective and TechNavio research report on laundry market size*

This is a highly fragmented market with no clear market leader...yet.
