If The Golden Gate Bridge were a Highway, the Taxpayer would be in this position:

He would not be consulted as to its building.

He would have to absorb the whole of its cost in direct taxes.

He would get no direct return.

BUT, Since The Golden Gate Bridge is A Public Toll Bridge, the Taxpayer is in this position:

He is consulted as to its building.

He is taxed only for the preliminary work, the total of $1,000,000, and this will be refunded.

All the remaining costs is absorbed by bonds redeemed from tolls.

There will be no tax after the bonds are voted and sold.

There will be a surplus earned of over seventeen Million Dollars in forty years, which will be distributed among the counties and may be applied for the reduction of general taxation.

Which is a better proposition for the taxpayer?

He accepts the highway without cost and recognizes that the

Muni Bond Costs Hit Investors in Wallet

Investors Pay Twice as Much for Municipal Debt as for Corporate Bonds

Big Money

Mom-and-pop investors traded about $915 billion in municipal bonds from 2009–13. But they are paying more to brokers for those investments than do purchasers of other types of U.S. securities.
