Fast Facts

- We are building a new software category for an old and critically important job: management
- Why now? Work has gone digital, but management is still analog. There's finally enough data for a new platform to emerge
- We're starting with Customer Service and Sales orgs, but most other roles - from truck driving to nursing - are digitizing fast
- Top-tier user engagement and strong testimonials show that users are embracing our platform and category
- Six-figure deals, multi-year renewals, and accelerated bookings show that buyers have been waiting for this new category
- Repeat founders with previous exits, and our CCO was one of our first customers

Work has gone digital, but management is still analog

Managers and their teams are spending more and more time on "toil" – pulling data, building spreadsheets – and less time on higher value activities.

It's affecting company performance and personal success

Why do organizations move slowly? Why can't managers manage more than 10 people? Why can't employees manage themselves?

Leaders

They need to point hundreds of people in the right direction. It takes weeks of emails, meetings, dashboards, reminders, and lieutenants

Managers

They need to make their teams hit their goals. It takes hours of manual labor to track and coach, capping the number of people they can manage

Frontline employees

They need to feel in control of their careers. They don't have access to performance data nor understand how to interpret it

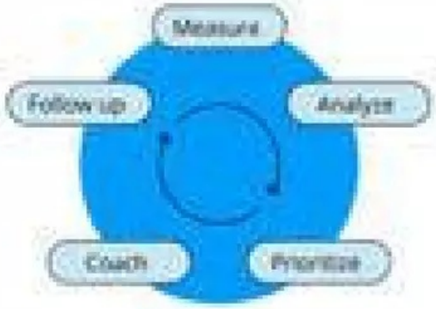

The conditions now exist for a platform to transform management

The rise of software makes it possible; the evolving nature of work makes it probable

There's enough data

Everything is instrumented. Data is getting more abundant, structured, and accessible each day.

Management is standardizing

KPIs and management methods are being standardized across all data-driven roles.

The world is changing

Companies are desperately searching for ways to manage distributed teams and new generations.

We have worked together for nearly a decade across multiple companies and projects. We founded our first company, SeatMe, in 2011 and sold it to Yelp in 2013. At Yelp, we saw how even a data-driven, multi-thousand person Sales/CS organization relied on manual manager labor to stay afloat. We discovered that with the digitization of work the conditions finally existed to change that and transform how we manage our teams and ourselves.
