Design to Code, Automated.

YCombinator | S18

The Problem

Today, companies building software spend precious time taking design to production. Engineering teams put great efforts into turning images to code manually.

The Solution

With Anima, designers click a button inside their design tools to share code with engineers.

We take companies faster to production.

How Does it Work

- Designers click a button to upload designs to Anima
- Engineers get code with a single click

Market

- Market Size: $8B/year
  - 5M Designers + 15M Front-end Developers
  - We charge $400/year/seat

- Go to Market: B2B SaaS, Bottom-up
  - Designers discover Anima and spread it within their team
  - Our community is 100k strong

Roadmap

- Converting any design to any code framework.
- Embracing engineers with developer-friendly code.
- Becoming a continuous design-to-development platform.

Competitive Landscape

Sketch, Figma, Adobe XD
The major design-tools are competing for the throne, and it requires focus. 90% of UI designers uses one of the above, and we will integrate with them all, allowing designers to use Anima easily. These are our allies, not competition.

Zeplin
A collaboration platform.
Automates the creation of style-guides.
It does not generate runnable code.

InVision
A presentation-like prototyping tool.
InVision is also competing Zeplin over design handoff.
It does not generate runnable code.

Webflow
'No code' website builder. Webflow focuses on individuals and marketing. It does not focus on product teams, or any team with engineers.

Founders

We believe that great UX is essential.
We want to bring better experience to those creating it.
